

Facts, which confer truth are separate from propositions, which suggest something about the world. There is a necessity of understanding to which a sentence belongs. The mind perceives sense-data, which is processed through sensation. This is relevant to the epistemic process, as it concerns our relation to data.