

In the epistemic process, objects are perceived as (sense-) data. The data is computed as information, being placed in a context. Then, knowledge is possible by inferring understanding and, subsequently, ideas, concepts and models. It is notable that truth is intentionally absent in this diagram.

Baskarada, S., & Koronios, A. (2013). Data, Information, Knowledge, Wisdom (DIKW): A Semiotic Theoretical and Empirical Exploration of the Hierarchy and its Quality Dimension. Australasian Journal of Information Systems, 18(1).