

From apparent disorder patterns appear. We infer shapes, generate meaning by associative processes. Constellations are constructions of the mind, which excels at weaving through disparate collections. The creative process benefits from such stimulation. Spatial apparent disorder calls for associative thinking, which includes semantic leaps, which are paramount for creativity.